Employing Vocational Power

“When the righteous prosper, the city rejoices,” according to Proverbs 11:10. But while a number of American evangelicals seem to be prospering, it’s safe to say that there are many people in cities across the country who are definitely not rejoicing. Why? Too many believers have an anemic vision of both God’s kingdom and their role in ushering it in. Too often, churches fail to equip their parishioners for deep, creative, intentional vocational stewardship.

With years of experience and research, Amy Sherman gives a compelling vision of the kingdom of God and provides the means for missional pastors to practically help their congregations embrace and employ their vocational power. Let the cities rejoice!

Sherman addresses questions like:

- What does a “rejoiced” city look like?
- What are the characteristics of the truly righteous?
- What sort of spiritual formation do people need to become effective and wise stewards of their resources?
- How can pastors help people identify their passions?
- What are seven dimensions of vocational power?
- What are four practical “pathways” for deploying congregations to greater vocational stewardship?
- What are particular temptations associated with each pathway and how can these be navigated?
