IVP Launches New Series Exploring the Future of Christian Theology

InterVarsity Press (IVP) is pleased to announce the publication of a new series investigating the dynamic and unexpected changes in the study of theology during the twenty-first century. New Explorations in Theology (NET), launching in December 2015, will further cement IVP's commitment to publishing constructive works that advance key theological conversations. IVP will be using this series to single out the best in new monographs and research, working to stimulate fruitful dialogue.

"A monograph and dissertation line is the bread and butter of an academic publisher," says David Congdon, associate editor for IVP Academic and project editor of NET. "As the IVP Academic line matures, it is essential to have a place to publish and nurture the work of young, new scholars. We look forward to publishing creative, constructive works in the disciplines of systematic, historical, philosophical and practical theology."

The goal of the NET series is to publish volumes that are attainable to a broader audience of scholars and general readers with attractive prices, robust marketing plans and the high production quality for which IVP is already known. IVP Academic will look for projects that investigate new areas of research, stimulate fruitful dialogue and attend to the diverse array of contexts and audiences in our increasingly pluralistic world.

The first volume in this series is The Reality of God and Historical Method, written by Samuel V. Adams, director of graduate studies and assistant professor of theology and social justice at Kilns College in Bend, Oregon. In this premier book, Adams—whose research currently focuses on understanding theologies of history and their relationship to theories of social action—engages the classic problem of the relation between faith and history from the perspective of apocalyptic theology in critical dialogue with the work of N. T. Wright.

"New Testament scholars seldom have their basic underlying assumptions about truth, time and the nature of history subjected to careful scrutiny. Yet their assumptions about these notions profoundly shape everything they purport to describe in the name of 'history.' It is then a special opportunity to have Sam Adams's trained philosophical and theological mind probe the assumptions underlying the work of the most widely-read New Testament scholar of our day, N. T. Wright," praises Douglas A. Campbell of Duke University. "In the hands of Adams's gentle but firm critique, we are led to a different interpretative place where those critical assumptions concerning truth, time and history are—at least arguably—aligned more accurately and fruitfully with the notion that ultimately informs all valid Christian scholarship: the disclosure of the nature of God in the person of Jesus Christ."

The second volume in this series will be Karl Barth's Infralapsarian Theology: Origins and
