IVP and CAPS Continue Partnership with New Editions of Core Texts

InterVarsity Press (IVP), along with the Christian Association for Psychological Studies (CAPS), is releasing new editions of two core texts in the fields of psychology and counseling. These new editions will further the development of psychology and counseling students, practitioners, and professors.

The second editions of The Reciprocating Self and Modern Psychopathologies, which were originally published in 2005, bring the books up to speed with the latest developments in psychology over the last decade, including updated research and case studies.

“IVP’s partnership with CAPS is an exciting opportunity to work at the cutting edge of Christian psychological research,” says David Congdon, associate editor of IVP Academic. “The explosion of involvement in the field of psychology has been one of the most remarkable examples of Christians addressing the ‘scandal of the evangelical mind.’ The authors of our CAPS books are exploring new conversations and new areas of integration, which are academically rigorous, clinically tested, and theologically minded. We are thrilled to be a partner in the publication of works that will contribute to human well-being and the flourishing of God’s kingdom.”

CAPS, the largest nonprofit association of Christians in counseling and the behavioral sciences, began their publishing partnership with IVP in 2005 with the release of the first edition of Modern Psychopathologies: A Comprehensive Christian Appraisal. When first published it received accolades from practitioners and professors. Les Parrott, author of Counseling and Psychotherapy, wrote, “Finally! A comprehensive Christian perspective on abnormal psychology. This book is grounded, insightful, biblical, practical, accessible – and long overdue. Everyone interested in exploring psychopathology from a Christian worldview will relish reading this book.” The new edition is fully updated according to DSM-V and ICD-10, and the authors have expanded the analysis to include problems associated with trauma, gender, addiction, and more.

In the revised and expanded second edition of The Reciprocating Self, Balswick, King, and Reimer have added research from developmental neuroscience and neuropsychology, which connects transitional behavior to a changing brain. They have also included a wealth of research on the moral, spiritual, and religious dimensions of human development, in which they introduce the notion of reciprocating spirituality. In addition the authors engage with the burgeoning fields of positive and evolutionary psychology.

Since the 2005 launch, IVP and CAPS have published more than twenty books at both the

BOOK DETAILS

“I was a big fan of The Reciprocating Self. It is a rare book that delivers a scientific vision of human development through the logic of the spirit, working hard to show the reader how the depth of the human developmental experience is spiritual. So you can imagine this fanboy’s glee with the release of this updated second edition! If you missed it the first time, you’re in for a treat. This book will broaden your vision and deepen your understanding. I think it is a must for every pastor, youth worker, and children’s minister. And if you read the first edition – say, in a seminary class – now is the time to reread it. This updated version promises you and your ministry new insights.”
